INNER BALANCE THROUGH MUSICAL FLOW

Dhrupad, century-old style of Indian classical music, originates in Vedic scansion. Its practice is closely linked to the practice of Nada Yoga (Yoga of Sound). The rhythmic traditions traditionally accompanying it find their base in Sanskrit stanzas, which also represent the purest expression of Indian aesthetic grammar.

A traditional Indian miniature painting depicting a musical performance. A central figure, a man with a crown and a large earring, sits on a raised platform, playing a stringed instrument (veena). He is surrounded by three women in traditional attire. One woman on the left stands and plays a veena. Two women on the right stand and play pakhawaj drums. The scene is set outdoors with trees and a peacock in the foreground. The text 'OPEN TO ALL LEVELS' is written in a white box at the bottom of the illustration.
